PROJECTS ON PRODUCED BIOENZYME FROM CITRUS PEEL WASTE

Date : 17th January 2024

Venue: Microbiology Lab . LFDC

Participants: BTMC Final Year Students, LFDC

Under graduate students of BTMC final year, for their semester 6 project, produced bioenzyme from citrus peel waste collected from a local juice centre. The production of Bio Enzyme with this method is not only cost effective but also contributes to the management of organic wastes by recycling them. The produced bioenzyme was used to treat leachate which is a toxic and viscous liquid which is the resultant of the continuous and prolonged discharge of unsegregated waste. The above project was undertaken in order to train students and to evoke consciousness about the current societal and environmental issues around them. Dr. J. Usha Rani, assistant professor microbiology is the supervisor. The leachate sample was collected from the Devendra Nagar waste treatment plant. The sample chosen specifically for the project is an intermediate leachate (i.e. the leachate that has formed over the span of 5-10 years).

 A group of students in blue lab coats and masks are standing outdoors next to a large pile of organic waste. A man in an orange vest is also present.
